

THE NEW YORKER

THOMAS ROMA

October 29 2015 – December 23 2015

Beginning in 2008, Roma began taking a series of ambiguous, charged portraits and landscapes in the Vale of Cashmere, a section of Prospect Park frequented by men cruising for sex, seventy-five of which are on view here. The men in the portraits agreed to be photographed, and, while some look uneasy, others confront the camera with a calm assurance. Many of the landscapes present the park as an oasis of isolation and comfort, but it's also a site of pursuit, as seen in a number of panoramic sequences of men following paths deep into the woods. Through Dec. 23.
